The diagram shows a chair being decomposed into its constituent parts. The parts are represented by icons and labeled with their respective counts:

- Top Row (Parts): A long wooden slat (labeled x2), four teal rectangular panels (each labeled x1), and two L-shaped corner brackets (each labeled x1).
- Bottom Row (Assembly Sequence): A sequence of steps showing how the parts are assembled. It starts with a single teal panel (x1) and a square frame (x2). This is followed by adding vertical slats (x2) and horizontal slats (x2). Then, three more teal panels are added (each labeled x1). Finally, the L-shaped corner brackets are attached (one labeled x30, which appears to be a typo for x1, and another labeled x1).

we love aluminum

Aluminum is a popular choice for outdoor furniture because it is lightweight, durable, and resistant to corrosion. It can withstand the elements and is not prone to rusting like other metals, making it a long-lasting option for outdoor use.
